Former REL quarterback selected 2000s Player of the Decade

Player of the Decade As part of its year-long 50th anniversary commemoration, the Southland Conference announced its All-Decade Football Team from the 2000s. The team includes 106 outstanding student-athletes, including honorees from each of the 10 institutions that were football members during the decade.

Former Robert E. Lee High School and Stephen F. Austin State University quarterback Jeremy Moses was selected as the 2000s Player of the Decade after becoming the first-ever Southland Conference player to win the Walter Payton Award in 2010. During his 2007-2010 career, Moses rewrote the Southland passing record book, establishing nine passing and three total offense records. Selected as the 2009 and 2010 Player of the Year and the 2010 Offensive Player of the Year, Moses is the Southland's career passing leader with 13,401 yards. He also threw 121 touchdowns for a Southland record. He led the league in passing during the 2008, 2009 and 2010 seasons, becoming only the second league quarterback to do so in three seasons.
