

President Obama to deliver national address to students

On Tuesday, President Obama will address the nation's schoolchildren regarding the importance of education and challenging students to assume responsibility for their learning.

Because of various scheduling conflicts at the campus level, Goose Creek CISD will not show the president's address live. Instead, the District will incorporate the president's address into future social studies classes.

Parents who do not want their child to either view or participate in lessons surrounding the president's address should send a note to school with their child indicating their desire for their child to be excluded from the activities. Students who do not participate in the lesson will be provided other learning opportunities during this time. The District sent a letter (ENG | SPA) to parents and guardians advising them of the opt-out option.

If you have any questions, please call your child's school.
